The Coalition, citizen-led from 1991 to the present, initially brought together Love County citizens and agencies to raise awareness of child abuse and neglect, educate the public to report suspicions of harm, and advocate for intervention resources.

As helping agencies continued to join the Coalition, and as research-based programs and initiatives in the related areas of domestic violence, substance abuse, mental health, and wellness and fitness for life and work came into being, the citizens’ group expanded its scope beyond child abuse prevention.

The leadership came to view the Coalition as a means to bring to the table all government and non-profit agencies dealing with children, youth, women, seniors, and families to work compatibly with Love County people and each other to improve the health and social well-being of our 9,000 citizens. Agencies, enjoying the cooperation, were quick to target Love County for pilot projects.

In 2009, the Coalition, with assistance from the Turning Point initiative, engaged in strategic planning. The result was a name change to the Love County Community Coalition to reflect the expanding number of interests taken on by the original Child Advocacy Task Force. The group adopted bylaws and mission and vision statements. Also, the functionality of the organization underwent realignment. A system of committees replaced the former “forum” nature of the group, with an eye on working subgroups that would be active outside the once-a-month meetings.
In a joint initiative around health and fitness, the Love Community Coalition and the Tishomingo Development Team representing Johnston County were awarded a TSET Community of Excellence Nutrition and Fitness grant.

The newly formed consortium includes half its members from each county and a Nutrition and Fitness Coordinator who will facilitate grant activities that will include making both counties more conducive to healthy lifestyle change.

Barbara Sessions, Chair Love County Community Coalition

“As a Coalition, our leadership contribution to the people of Love County has been to elicit, adopt, and appreciate the best work our public servants can put forth. The Coalition meets monthly, serves food, has a detailed program of presentations by agencies and volunteers, brings in experts, has working committees, and communicates to members and the public between meetings. This opens the way for the serendipity of advances beyond what one had dreamed.”
