February Continues 24-Month Revenue Streak

OKLAHOMA CITY – Oklahoma is celebrating its second anniversary of revenue growth out of the Great Recession, State Treasurer Ken Miller said today as he released the February gross receipts report. The state economy shows signs of improving health in all areas measured by state revenue collections, especially income taxes, he said.

“In the past 12 months, all major sources of revenue are higher than the previous 12 month period,” Miller said. “However, the state income tax is by far the strongest performer. It is up by more than 14 percent over the period, while all other areas are up by less than 10 percent.”

Even so, Miller said recent signs point to decreasing revenue generated by natural gas production.

“We continue to see the impact of low natural gas prices,” he said. “For a third consecutive month, gross production collections are down compared to the prior year. In five of the past 12 months, gross production has dropped below the prior year.”

The spot price of natural gas reached a 52-week low today on the New York Mercantile Exchange, having dropped more than 47 percent in the past year. Today’s price was set at $2.36 per thousand cubic feet.

However, on the broad scale, Miller said total revenue collections – a reflection of the performance of Oklahoma’s economy – continue robust growth.

“In the past two years, monthly receipts have been up over the prior year. In each of the past 12 months, collections are up by more than 10 percent six times and more than 15 percent three times, including in February,” he said.

It has been three years and two months since state collections began showing the impact of the recession. Collections began rising exactly two years ago. Miller said 12-month collections are now more than $1.5 billion or 78.3 percent higher than at the low point.

“Barring any unforeseen occurrences, Oklahoma is on track to recover revenues lost during the recession before the end of the year,” Miller said.
