GEORGE WARREN BROWN SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK

Michael Sherraden, PhD

Michael Sherraden is the founder and director of the Center for Social Development at the George Warren Brown School of Social Work at Washington University in St. Louis. A widely sought after high-level collaborator and consultant, Dr. Sherraden's work takes him across the country and around the world. His work has received widespread recognition for its impact on public policy. He is the creator of the widely praised Individual Development Accounts or IDAs, which are matched savings programs designed to help the working poor save money and accumulate assets. IDAs have been adopted in federal legislation and in more than 40 states.

Dr. Sherraden's work on asset development has influenced policy development in the United Kingdom, Taiwan, Canada, and other countries around the world. He is also engaged in research and policy development in the areas of civic engagement and productive aging.

Dr. Sherraden has served as an adviser and consultant to the White House, Department of Treasury, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Department of Health and Human Services, Carnegie Council, and many other organizations. His work has been funded by many foundations and government agencies, including the Ford Foundation, Rockefeller Foundation, Charles Stewart Mott Foundation, Lumina Foundation for Education, German Marshall Fund of the United States, and the National Science Foundation.
